

Align your efforts

'To give children, young people and their parents the help they need, it is important to be well organised. Signalling informs all care providers about who does what and enables them to better coordinate their help.'

Signalling unsafe situations in time

If a child or young person needs help, it is important that professionals can get a quick and clear overview of the other care workers involved. Especially when the child needs help in several areas. Professionals need to be able to work together well as early as possible. Signaling quickly puts you as a healthcare provider into contact with other professionals in youth care and social work.

Improved family support with professional coordination

One family, one plan. That is the aim of Signaling. It is not desirable for a family or child to receive assistance from different organisations which are unaware of each other's existence. Signaling brings professionals working with the same child, youth and/or family into contact on a regional level and beyond.

Family functionality and time saving

Professionals also come into contact with each other when providing care to children with their respective parents. This is the family functionality. Children and their families then get better support and it is easier for the professional to find out if there is anything else going on in the family. This prevents contradictory advice.

Cross-domain coordination

Signaling ensures early coordination of education, youth care, healthcare, social work and safety professionals. This allows time for assistance and enables professionals to give suitable help, care or adjustments to young people in good time.

Signaling in the care process

Better coordination of care professionals

No contradictory advice

Saves time for care professionals

Cross-domain collaboration

Quicker adjustments

Early coordination

